Due to the wildly fluctuating price of fuel it is customary across the transportation industry to charge an “energy” or fuel surcharge (FSC). It’s included in the price at FedEx, UPS and for your plane or bus ticket. The only companies that do not charge an FSC are usually ones that force the drivers to pay for their own fuel which in turn makes the company’s fuel bill $0 but leads to high driver turnover.

The surcharge is based on the delivery charge since the price of the delivery generally increases with weight and distance which affect the fuel cost. So if the delivery charge is $10 and the FSC for the month is 10% then the total delivery charge would be $11. We calculate at the end of each month and look back at the historical average fuel price for that month.
